• Stephanie Zwolinski, Systems Librarian went to the Computers in Libraries conference in Washington DC recently. Zwolinski attended a presentation by Lee Rainie of Pew Research. Wisniewski shared a quote from Zwolinski’s report:

  “His research is showing that the public continues to think highly of us, and that they trust us. They want us to become better, because they know how awesome we already are. They would like libraries to help with protecting online privacy. They value the library as a safe place, and they value the calm and ambience of a library as a reading space. They think of librarians as pathfinders, curators, and arbiters for trusted information in a time when they feel they are seeing a “weaponization of information”. They expect librarians to be Master Teachers, as Tech and as Data experts, in an age of lifelong learning. Rainie pointed out that, in a time of extreme change driven by technology and social norms, the public realizes that nobody has had to reinvent themselves more than libraries and librarians – therefore we are well-suited to providing the leadership and guidance that the public expects of us. "Any day spent with librarians is a better day".... Lee Rainie”

5. OCPL Report:
• Dodge emailed the board a written summary from the last meeting. One item of note is the presence of a trauma response team who can head off trouble before it begins at the Central Branch.
