Printing from Yahoo Mail and Gmail

For some strange reason Yahoo Mail and Gmail won’t let you print from the File/Print command the way you’d normally expect to be able to. Oh sure, you can print, but you won’t get the email message that you’re hoping for. Instead, you’ll get just the screen that you’re on.

In order to print just the email message that you’re looking at, you have to recite special incantations involving the ZIP Codes of the main offices of Yahoo and Google. Nah, I’m just kidding…while the process you use does take a few extra steps than you’d expect, it’s not anywhere near as complex as that whole incantation thing.

The instructions you need are below:

Yahoo Mail

On the toolbar in your Yahoo Mail window, look for the More tab (yeah, who woulda thought to look there?). Once you’re at the More tab, just scroll down to Print, and you should be all set.

Gmail

Go to the far right-hand end of the toolbar, and just past the Reply button (the curved arrow), you’ll see one more arrow that points down. Tap on this, and you’ll see a host of options, including the one for Print.

And that’s it! Now you know how to print a single email message from either of those two services.
